SIFTING RESULTS

In looking back over your students' work the past school year, there is the inevitable question, What has been accomplished? Any progressive teacher will have made some headway. But was it gained in spite of an unsatisfactory textbook?

Literally, hundreds of teachers write us—"I know I have had immeasurably better results because I have used this year the WARD Books."

Teach Literature Itself Rather Than about Literature

A Study of the Types of Literature

By MABEL I. RICH

8vo. 525 pages

This is the first number of a series of high-school anthologies of literature, that is being prepared under the general editorship of Dr. James F. Hosis, to appear, and is for the upper years. The chronological arrangement has been followed. Each type is traced from its earliest appearance to the present day and those that have come to be regarded as the best examples of each form have been noted and, wherever possible, given in full and studied. There are admirable introductions and notes, suggestions both for teachers and pupils, outside reading, in fact everything essential to the high-school course. Miss Rich has at last provided a way of escape from the formal history of English literature on the one hand and the over minute, pedantic study of three or four estimable masterpieces on the other.

Facts and Backgrounds of Literature

English and American

By

GEORGE F. REYNOLDS and GARLAND GREEVER

16mo. 428 pages

A handbook presenting the "essentials"—important data, biographical and literary facts, social and historical backgrounds, and other fundamental information bearing on the history of literature as a whole and each important writer, and brought together in no other single volume. The material is so arranged that it is accessible for instant reference and can be easily and rapidly assigned. Its use relieves the teacher of much drudgery and enables him to give greater attention to the study of literature itself. There is a wealth of helpful and illustrative maps, charts, and illustrations.

Two fascinating books for your next year's classes:

ENGLISH LITERATURE

By DR. JOHN L. HANEY

Central High School, Philadelphia

Many teachers find difficulty in arousing interest in early English literature because so much of that literature is either inaccessible or unintelligible to the pupil. Vitality begins only with the Elizabethan era; Beowulf and Caedmon and even Chaucer remain only names.

Dr. Haney has met the problem by an especially illuminating and careful treatment of the dominant figures before Shakespeare. The story of British literary genius progresses with unbroken reality from its remote beginnings to the present day. When the student has finished the book he is conscious of no sharp division between the authors he really knows and those whom he has merely heard about. And he is eager to do more reading.

With introduction, bibliography, and notes so arranged as not to interrupt the course of the story. 167 illustrations. Price $1.60

AMERICAN LITERATURE

By THOMAS E. RANKIN

University of Michigan

and WILFORD M. AIKIN

Director of the Scarborough School
Scarborough-on-Hudson

This book, like Dr. Haney's, possesses none of the cut-and-dried formalism usually associated so unhappily with "histories" of literature. While it includes every necessary fact of time and place, in scholarly arrangement, American Literature is rather the entertaining story of the men and women who have written America into her distinguished place among the civilized nations of the world. It is a fascinating record of accomplishment, from the days before the Pilgrim Fathers far into the year 1921.

*With introduction, bibliographies and many distinctive illustrations.
Probable price $1.60*

FOR HIGH SCHOOL ENGLISH CLASSES

English Readings for Commercial Classes

By Dr. C. A. HERRICK

This new book is the first based on the presumption of a relationship between business and literature. From the time when Chaucer described the "Fourteenth Century Merchant" in the Prologue until Van Dyke asked the question "Who Sneers at Commerce?" business has been a theme that has found its way into literature.

This compendium of the best literary selections portraying business experience and reflecting business ideals will serve as the means of enrichment to the commercial English courses.

English Poetry: Progress and Masterpieces

By GAYLEY, YOUNG, and KURTZ

This new and completely revised edition is undoubtedly the best collection of English poetry for school use now available.

The position and scholarly reputation of the authors are a guaranty of its accuracy.

The success of the book in former editions is ample proof of its suitability for school use, and the inclusion in the revised edition of recent authors has made it of still greater value to high-school classes.

Short Plays by Representative Authors

By ALICE M. SMITH

This book meets the demand for the best there is in material for dramatic reading and study in high schools.

In this collection embracing twelve short plays the author has more than entertainment in mind. The drama is regarded as the medium through which the pupils may feel the thoughts and glimpse the lives of the various nations.

In the collection as a whole appeal is made to a wide range of emotions.

A History of English Literature

By W. A. NEILSON and A. H. THORNDIKE

In its aims and methods this book stands out in a distinctive way from all the many texts on the subject of English Literature. It teaches literature as functioning in the lives of its readers.

Many of the insignificant facts and much of the trivial criticism usually found in texts are entirely omitted and stress is placed on the works of the really great authors. An effort is made through the study of characteristic literature to depict and interpret the great changes in thought and feeling by which civilization progresses. The chief types of literature are emphasized and their history traced. Each chapter is a unit, treating of a definite subject. Topical outlines precede the treatment in each chapter. Abundant aids and devices simplify the work of teachers and pupils.
